The principles of managing your career

1. Define the vision and ambition for your career
2. Assess your experience gap in view of the targeted position
3. Constantly monitor career opportunities
4. Be bold and indicate interest, even if you have to stretch into the new role

Differentiation

- stand out from the crowd

The challenge for any COO is how to structure and represent their experiences that differentiates them from other COOs.

A COO dedicates time to 2 principle points of effort:

- Managing change and driving execution
- Running the business and keeping the lights on

The value is in a COOs change pedigree, where much of this effort in past years has been driven by:

- Meeting the obligations set by regulation
- Delivering cost and efficiencies

A new phase:

- Commercial acumen
- Risk and technology focus
- People and culture
- Diversity and inclusion

Diversity of experience

A jack of all trades, master of none?

Understanding your skillset

Skills are a combination of different things:

- Knowledge – what you know (markets, products, geographical areas)
- Attitudes – how you approach things (enthusiasm, motivation)
- Character – your personality/ personal qualities (sense of humour, diplomacy)
- Strengths – things you are naturally talented at (public speaking, numeracy)
- Experience – what you have done (work experience, qualifications, training, voluntary work)
- Judgment – How you make decisions and establish priorities

Transferable Skills

Once you've identified what you can do, think about your transferable skills.

These are skills which work in every type of job - and that's why they're so important.

And they go beyond the ability to use a specific piece of equipment, or do one specific thing.

Need a couple of examples? Here are four of the most in-demand transferable skills that are found in a COO:

1. Initiative
2. Planning
3. Teamwork
4. Communication

Skills and Competencies

- How compelling is your story?
- How can you demonstrate you are part of the solution?
- Commoditise your experiences to fit your ambitions and the need of the market

A strategic thinker, complex problem solver, sensitive communicator, relationship builder, solutions provider, influencer, drives change, engages with detail

Key takeaways

“The only person you are destined to become, is the person you decide to be.”

Ralph Waldo Emerson

Make time – managing your own career is a job in itself, exceed in this task as you seek to do so in your daily tasks.

Therefore, take time to check in with yourselves and to ensure that you are still clear on your purpose and where you are on this journey

Visibility – essential to explore ways of increasing your visibility to others and by doing so, setting your own path with the help of others and not reliant solely on others
